THE FIRST LOVE.

Homer Bassford Brings Up Old Memories Who of all the hundreds and thousands of old boys does not remember-with a sigh of regret that his youth is passedhis first love? Who of all that vast army does not remember the dimplecheeked, brown-eyed lass, or the girl with yellow, sunshiny curls and laughing face, or the fair, blue-eyed little girlwith whom he fell into his first love? Many of all this growd have girls of their own now, whose beaus hang on the front gate until it isn't there any longer, just the same as we did when we were

My first love! Softly I breathe the words that mean so little to me. But I speak reverentially of the years that are gone, out of respect to the memory of those who went with them. The recollection of early kisses and sly hugs, stolen on the way home from "singin'," comes up and forces a sigh; but, withal, the thoughts of my youth can only be pleasant ones. It is not altogether clear to me now how I came to imagine myself in love with the sweet and pretty Barbara. I only know that I called her "my girl" in an off-hand manner, and all the neighbors somehow admitted that I had an undisputed right to the claim. Barbara did not wear bangs or any of the patent arrangements that go to complete feminine toilets of to-day. Perhaps she would have worn them had they been in vogue, but I will give the little girl the benefit of the doubt. Many months were spent in the usual love-making preliminaries before I felt it my duty to tell Barbara of my love for her. On the day had set for making the avowal, I dressed up just after noon and set off down the road for the sweet child's house. My costume was of linsey, and Mistress-Mary, what are you doing it consisted simply of shirt, coat, and trousers. The latter were of a large, roomy pattern, very much like those worn to-day by young men who follow the styles. Mine were not cut from any particular style, and they did not reach my ankies, but two little things like that

Barbara was sitting on the style when I reached her house, and she said "goodevenin'" that pretty mid-afternoon in such a pleasant way that I wanted to bite her then and there. A big shade was tied down over hershead to keep the sun from dropping freckles on the rosy checks, while mitts of her own making encased the small hands I so longed to hold. I forget my mission as I looked at her, and my dream was broken by some stray remark about the need of rain. But I braced up to my task, and began to collect my thoughts. How many times ten minutes! How often I ran my big. brown shands into those short, roomy trousers! But I told my Barbara I loved her, and she seemed glad of It all. After that day, what moments of bliss we spent together, and what great fools we made of ourselves from that time on. until one day she gave the north neighbor's son a bunch of field daisies, plucked by her own small hands. We quarreled then, and my first love was over. Although it was only silly child's play, wish I could play it over again. Such pleasures come but once in a lifetime, and blest is he who has to experience them. - Detroit Free Press. A Letter Which Never Went.

People who think the country is progressing at a gallop never visit the rural hamlets. I was in a small village in New Hampshire the other week, when a woman came into the Postoffice, which was in the back end of a general store. She had a letter in her hand marked "Iu

"Mr. Stubbs," she said to the postmaster, "won't a cout carry this letter?"

"No. Mrs. Judy." "Is postage stamps down any?"

"Just the same."

"Will you lick on the stamp?" "Yes'm"

"It's a letter I've writ to my sister in Massachusetts."

"Yes'm." "There aln't no money in it."

"It's jest fam'ly news, you know." "Very well."

"Did't know but it might git open, and o I used paste to stick it."

"Yes m.

"When will it go out?" "In the morning."

"And when'll she get it?" "In two days."

"Will you warrant it?" "Can't do that, Mrs. Judy." "You can't! Then what's the use o' my sending it? That's what I told 'em when you was appointed postmaster. I my husband out of a load of hay, war-might git it, and then agin she moghtn't. Samuel is goin' down that way in the spring and he can take it hisself, and 2 cents don't grow on every bush, Jim Stubbs!"

A Woman with a Hard Kind of Luck. The following conversation is reported to have taken place between a minister and a widow, both of Aberdeen. The widow, who called upon the minister, seemed desirous of relieving her mind of something which oppressed her, at which the reverend gentleman, wishing to hurry matters, exclaimed: "My good woman, you see I can be of no service to you till you tell me what it is that trou-

"Weel, sir," she replied in a tone less of sorrow than of bitterness, "this is the fourth. I'm sure there never wis a wumman sae completely tormented wi' sic' a set o' deein' men as I've been."

A barber was recently arrested in Paris for badly cutting a customer. There was no question about the gash and what made it seem worse, the razor wielder said in a way he had done it purposely.

After the testimony was in the Judge asked the barber if he had anything to Yes, monsieur, I have. I justify the cutting on the ground that it was merely a cierical error-a slip of the pen." "What," cried the Judge, gasping with astonishment. "Permit me," continued the lather slapper. "For months the plaintiff has been getting shaved on trust at my establishment. I have no very convenient means of keeping accounts, so every time I shaved the gentleman I cut a little nick in his cheek in order to guide me in my charges when the long deferred day of payment came. So many nicks, of course, so many shaves."

The barber paused a moment and the whole court was on the tiptoe of expectation "But how about the clerical error?"

asked the Judge. "I am coming to that, sir. It so happened that the account had already arrived at the one-hundredth nick and my hand being somewhat unused to making ciphers, the razor turned when I attempted them, with the result known." The entire honesty and caudor of the barber was so plain he was left off with a light fine.

Foolish Martyrs.

There are martyrs and martyrs. Some were wise in the loftiest, some are silly in the most improvident sense. The word improvident exactly applies to the latter class, since they neglect to provide against threatened danger. We commiserate, but we cannot respect them. Among the silliest are martyrs to rheumatism, Among the silliest are martyrs to rheumatism, who might have prevented daily and nightly recurring torture by the early use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a blood depurent more efficient in removing the virus of this compisaint from the circulation than any thus far brought to the notice of the general community and the medical profession. It promotes greater activity of the kidneys, the channel through which blood impurities, productive of rheumatism, gout and dropsy are principally expelled, and it imparts a degree of vigor to digestion and assimilation which has a most favorable bearing on the general health. It also remedies billiousness, kidney troubles and malaria.

Foolish Consistency.

A man who is rigidly consistent admits himself to be no wiser to-day than he was yesterday. In order to keep with the times he must occasionally alter or modify his opinions. "A man will never change his mind who has no mind to change," says Archbishop Whately, and I changed from one foot to the other in | Faraday expresses the same idea, when he charges us to remember that "In knowledge that man is only to be despised who is not in a state of transition." There is a medium between what a worthy old gentleman calls "whifilin' about like a weathercock" and remaining rigidly in one rut of belief. Most of us know instances of men who cannot bring themselves to say anything which would contradict what they uttered last week or last year. A certain Irishman once declared that he had owned a horse which was lifteen feet high. A few days after he referred to the same animal as having been fifteen hands high. "But," said the listener, "you gave it the other day as fifteen feet." "Did I, thin?" said Patrick. "Well, I'll stick to it. He was fifteen feet high." That was consistency in its extreme form.

CATARRH.

Not Local, but Constitutional. Dr. Dio Lewis, the eminent Boston physician, in a recent magazine article says: radical error underlies nearly all medical treatment of catarris. * * * It is not a disease of the man's nose; it is a disease of the man showing itself in the nose—a local exhibition of a constitutional trouble." Therefore, she argues, that the use of snuff and other local applications is wrong, and while they seem to give temporary relief, they really do more harm than good. Other leading authorities agree with Dr. Lewis, Hence, the only proper method of cure for catarrh is by taking a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, reaching every part of the body through the blood, does eliminate all impurities and makes the whole man healthier. It removes the cause of the trouble and restores the diseased membrane to proper condition. That this is the practical result is proven by thousands of people who have been cured of catarrh by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

An Obliging Postmaster.

It's an obliging world sure enough. A New York woman malled a letter to Baltimore. It had a paper pocket sewed on the outside of the envelope with white thread. On the pocket was a message to the Postmaster that it contained 10 cents and that the writer desired the postal authorities to buy a special delivery stamp for the letter and deliver it as soon as it reached here. The injunction was obeyed and the letter promptly forwarded .- Baltimore Sun.

WATER is somewhat purified, or rather cleansed, in freezing, but hard, clear ice contains visible suspended impurities, and more that are invisible. Snow ice is very apt to be unclean, and the only safe way is to keep food and water away from direct contact with ice, unless it be artificially made from distilled water, a recent process that premises to become very popular.-Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

MUSICAL.

There seems to be little going on in musical circles of late, but there is much talk, among musical people, of the marvelous cure of Miss Bthe high contralto singer, who has long suffered from a severe throat or bronchial affection, superinduced by Catarrh in the Head, and who has been perfectly cured by the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, coupled with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For all bronchial, throat and lung affections, and lingering coughs, it is an unequaled remedy. When compli-cated with Chronic Nasal Catarra, its use should be coupled with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Of all druggists.
